to prove to his daughter that going to college isn't something to fear, Halsey is motivated by his family: he loves spending time with his wife and children most. In fact, "Coming from where I come from and my background, this job has given my family a chance to turn it all around for Halsey was ultimately his position here at LSC."

Halsey was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, but grew up in Corpus Christi and met his wife, Brenda, at a military base. Halsey's family moved to Texas when his wife completed her military service. Both of his parents, "grandfather to 10 grandchildren, including twin grandchildren."

Cannon grew up moving around Texas due to her father's job, but her family even went abroad when her father was in the military. She went to college in Corpus Christi and studied biology with an emphasis in biochemistry and a minor in chemistry.

"I didn't have any problems connecting with people (on a horse), it just seemed right. I wanted to learn the ranch and the herd."

A few years later, Kinney and her horses joined Alpha and Omega Mounted Patrol - "A group of qualified police officers involved in community service through the use of horses" - which was established in 1975. "I could work a horse better than I could work a dog," she said. Kinney grew up moving around Texas due to her father's job, but her family even went abroad when her father was in the military. She went to college in Corpus Christi and studied biology with an emphasis in biochemistry and a minor in chemistry.

"I could work a horse better than I could work a dog," she said. Kinney's husband retired in 1980 and they settled in Texas when a pivotal moment came when the family decided to buy a horse property.

In 2013, Cannon learned about an opportunity to become an officer at LSC. She worked as a police officer at Hempstead ISD's elementary school for 13 years, then became a public safety officer at LSC. "The best parts of my days have to do with the people I work with. Overall, working with the people in the system has always been a pleasure. We are in situations where we have maybe saved a life in the process, and that makes you feel good too," she said. "The best parts of my days have to do with the people I work with. Overall, working with the people in the system has always been a pleasure. We are in situations where we have maybe saved a life in the process, and that makes you feel good too," she said. "The best parts of my days have to do with the people I work with. Overall, working with the people in the system has always been a pleasure. We are in situations where we have maybe saved a life in the process, and that makes you feel good too," she said.

Meek was interested in law enforcement when he was in high school, but he didn't become a police officer until 37 years later. "When I was a kid, I was interested in law enforcement, but I didn't get into it until I was 37 years old," he said. "I was here when it was nothing but flat dirt and hogs."

Meek started his career as a police officer at a mass transit agency in Houston. "I worked in a jail, working in communications and dispatching," he said. "I was in charge of a call center."

Meek has been with LSC Police Department for 17 years, and he has been a dispatcher for 15 years. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said. "I enjoy seeing people smile. To me, that's what it's all about. You make them feel comfortable, and I think that's what it's all about," he said.