Location
Located about ten miles northwest of downtown Houston, Acres Home (also known as Acres Homes or Acreage Homes), is a unique mix of rural and urban. The historic neighborhood, once considered the South’s largest unincorporated African American community, was developed during World War I and got its name because land there was sold by the acre, instead of by the lot. The land was cheap and offered rural settlers ample space.

Because of its proximity to downtown and the vast amount of affordable, heavily-wooded land that still exists there today, the community has attracted the attention of a number of developers, including hip hop artist Slim Thug who grew up in Acres Home. Other big names from Acres Home include current Houston Mayor, Sylvester Turner, award-winning actress Loretta Devine, and rappers Chamillionaire and Paul Wall.

Affectionately known as the “44” due to the Metro bus that runs through the community, Acres Home is open for business.
