we care about the students. I want to set them up for success. I love it here,” Montagna said.

An adjunct professor and quickly assumed the role of surgical technology program director.

crafting projects like woodworking, crocheting and costume designing.

“What keeps me here is the Lone Star values. I never wanted to leave libraries, and I like into the LSC system and landed in her current position in 2015.

McGittigan then jumped across the pond to work in London for a few years at a private libraries. She was a student worker at the LSC-Kingwood certification. There, he realized becoming a college-level

Peru, he intended to use his education to help others. And classes available to her—often with help at home from her best fit for him.

Gupta went on to do a postdoctoral fellowship at the needed. She became a full-time instructor in 2012 and now work at a pharmaceutical research lab for about 10 years.

Tymniak settled on policing and obtained his bachelor's setting the foundation for her career in law enforcement.

basketball and double majored in criminal justice and engineering to develop prosthetics for amputees, but first, he thought that was working in biomedical together. Gomez' daughter is also in LSC's Physical Therapist Assistant program.

community through initiatives such as active shooter trainings.

The pay was good, but Gomez wasn't happy and desired police work again. So, he as well as a daughter, Ashleigh, who attended LSC-North Harris for nursing and now guitar in his free time, Pete enjoys traveling, cooking and attending his church.

I'm going to retire again. But as long as I stay healthy and I get to interact with people, I'm out, and I see it in the young people here. I retired once, and people ask me when

Being part of the police department is like being part of a family: you don't always get help. He recommends visiting the department's website, LoneStar.edu/campus-police, Willingham is proud of his personnel for genuinely caring and always being ready to help. He recommends visiting the department's website, LoneStar.edu/campus-police,

Whenever someone tells LSC Police Department Deputy policing. In 2013, he received a Lifesaving Medal of Valor for rescuing a woman from a returning to patrol the Texas Medical Center after being them in a crisis only.

to patrol the Texas Medical Center after being of interacting with them in a crisis only.

to patrol the Texas Medical Center after being

LSC was one of the best moves she ever made.

Joachim said, who also teaches self-defense

Brenham Police Department.

provide safety and security,” Vidito said.